

When we released REAL Studio 2010 Release 1, we announced that we were moving our documentation away from PDF to an on-line wiki. The purpose of this is to make it easier for us to update the documentation and get it to you on-line as quickly as possible. For REAL Studio 2010 Release 2, we are taking the next step in that transition.

In this release, if you have an internet connection, choosing Getting Started, Tutorial or User's Guide from the Help menu will open your browser and go to wiki-version of these documents. The Language Reference will also show the wiki version but will open in its own window in the IDE as it always has. If no internet connection is available, the PDF version of the document will open instead. Because we are no longer updating the PDF versions, temporarily, the PDFs will continue to be from Release 1.

For REAL Studio 2010 Release 3, which will ship this summer, the PDFs will be completely replaced by the built-in versions the content from the wiki. That means each release will come with a built-in version of the documentation that is up to date for that release. But you will continue to be able to access the latest version online as well. We had hoped to have this done for R2 and it was but too late in the schedule for us to feel comfortable testing it well before shipping.

We apologize for the temporary situation for Release 2 and appreciate your understanding during this transition.

The REAL Studio Team